“MANUEL CHAVAJAY: XOJOWI JA QA TEE RUACHULEW” (MOTHER EARTH DANCES)

Currently on view
Institute of Contemporary Art, Miami
“Manuel Chavajay: Xojowi ja qa tee ruachulew” (Mother Earth Dances) is the first one-person institutional exhibition of the Tz’utujil Maya artist Manuel Chavajay (b. 1982, San Pedro La Laguna, Guatemala, where he lives). The exhibition presents eleven works produced over the past three years, including paintings made with marine oil and featuring traditional embroidery patterns depicting the landscape around Lake Atitlán, intervened earthenware pots, and remnants of site-specific performances. Together, the works focus on two important themes that have developed in Chavajay’s work: a growing concern over the increased pollution of Lake Atitlán in the Guatemalan Highlands, where the Tz’utujil live, and an ongoing meditation on the connection of the land to the cosmos, as understood in Tz’utujil ancestral knowledge.

IN-ROOM DINING

A Fresh Take On Dining

PLACE AN ORDER

START SMALL TODAY

By Kellie Williams, Fitness Specialist | Founder, BPM Wellness

August is National Wellness Month, and after more than two decades in fitness, I've learned one simple truth: people rarely struggle because they don't know what to do. They struggle because they try to change everything at once.

A new month arrives, and suddenly the goal is to work out every day, eat perfectly, sleep more, drink more water, and never miss a workout. It's a lot—and it's why so many people give up before they ever build momentum.

Instead, trade the reset for a routine.

Real wellness isn't built through dramatic overhauls. It's built through small decisions repeated consistently.

The healthiest people I know aren't perfect—they've simply created habits they can actually sustain.

This month, choose one habit. One that fits your life. Drink more water. Take a walk after dinner. Go to bed a little earlier. The habit itself matters less than your ability to repeat it.

Lasting wellness isn't created in one extraordinary day. It's created through ordinary choices made consistently over time.

THIS MONTH'S CHALLENGE

Before checking your phone each morning, drink one full glass of water. Start your day by investing in yourself before the world asks anything of you.
